TREMATON CASTLE

In the civil parish of Saltash.
In the historic county of Cornwall (Modern Authority of Cornwall, 1974 county of Cornwall).

Castle mentioned in Domesday and passed to the Dutchy of Cornwall in 1337. It became neglected in the mid C14 and was in ruins by C16. There are the remains of C12 shell keep and the gatehouse, rebuilt in C13, is substantially intact. A deer park is named in 1282 but had lost the deer by 1500. Higher Lodge, a two storey crenellated house (II*listed), was built within the castle bailey in 1807-8 and part of the curtain wall was demolished to provide views of the estuary.

Located in Totnes, Devon, the former beauty of a castle called Berry Pomeroy now stands in ruins. From 1066 to 1550, this castle once served as the home of the De La Pomerai family. You may wonder why such a family name may ring bells throughout the area, but it is some of the family members from the past who still hold a place in the minds and thoughts of residents.

When sifting through early records regarding the Berry Pomeroy Castle, you will find that the Pomeroy family earned wooden fortification for their roles played within the Norman Invasion. Throughout the years, many changes took place in regards to the castle and in about 1600, the buildings on the premises were enlarged.

By the end of the 17th century, the family that occupied Pomeroy Castle at the time (the Seymours), abandoned the residence. It didn□t take long for the castle to slowly decline. By 1730, the castle became the ruins you see today. So, what happened to the castle to make it such a ruin? The castle has suffered greatly throughout the years to the hands of destructive elements of weather. The lead, wood, and glass that the castle once possessed was also salvaged. Maybe it is its current appearance that breeds the haunted tales associated with the castle, but there plenty of stories attached to this site.

One of the legends connected to the castle involves one of the family members that have become known throughout the years. Her name is Margaret De La Pomerai and her ghost is believed encountered by many, who described her wearing robes of white. She offers a rather pitiful tale. Tales reveal that Margaret might have had a sister named Eleanor, who was filled with spite and negativity.

Sibling rivalry took center stage between the two sisters when they both fell in love with the same fellow. At the time, Margaret was a rather attraction woman and Eleanor paled in comparison. She was wildly jealous of her sister and could not contain her feelings. One day, she trapped her sister in one of the dungeons located in the castle, leaving her without any food or water. Margaret eventually passed away at the hands of her sister, but her spirit is said to live on. It is her image and figure that witnesses claim to have encountered while on the castle grounds.

The Berry Pomeroy castle also serves as home for many other ghosts, spirits and apparitions that you will be able to explore in upcoming articles. Some are animals like the Black Hound, while others are lost souls like the Blue Lady. Each has a story of their own. Be on the lookout!

ue 3: Weird Happenings at Berry Pomeroy, Devon

by Mavis Vigay | Summer 1994

I went with my husband John, our son Paul and his girlfriend Jan to visit Berry Pomeroy near Totnes. For several months we had been interested in the place and had read about the psychic phenomena which are reputed to have been witnessed in and around the castle which is said to be the most haunted one in England. It is intersected by ley lines which may have something to do with it.

History

The castle dates from the 15th and 16th centuries but the site has probably been occupied since the 11th century when Ralph de la Pomerai received the manor of Beri from William the Conqueror as a reward for his services at the Battle of Hastings. The Pomeroys, as their name became, held the manor until 1548, then it was sold to Edward Seymour, the brother of Jane Seymour who was the third wife of King Henry VIII. He became the first Duke of Somerset and was Lord Protector during the brief reign of the boy king Edward VI. He planned and began to build a new wing of state rooms at the castle. After his execution in 1552 the castle passed to his son Lord Edward Seymour who with his son, spent large sums of money continuing the building which was never finished. The castle was abandoned by the family and by 1730 had become a ruin. The castle still belongs to a Seymour - the 19th Duke of Somerset.

Many strange tales have grown up around the castle, of apparitions, freezing air, shadows of unseen objects, feelings of fear, lights and unexplained sounds, so it was with great curiosity that we drove into the leafy grounds of the castle and parked the car. We went for a pleasant woodland walk with our two dogs where a steep slope lay below one side of our path. On our return we left the dogs in the car then Paul, Jan and I walked towards the castle whilst my husband John took some photographs and kept his eye on the dogs.

Ghostly apparitions

A Gatehouse with two towers, a curtain wall with a small round tower at the end and the remains of a large three storied medieval mansion rose in front of us. We entered the Courtyard through the Gatehouse then walked along the Rampart to the small tower called Margaret's Tower which fascinated us as it is haunted by the ghost of Lady Margaret Pomeroy. She had been imprisoned there by her jealous sister Lady Eleanor as both sisters had loved the same man. Inside the tower we went down a steep spiral staircase to a dark damp chamber, a dungeon in which small slit-like gun loops let in some light. The ground was wet and it seemed a very eery place. On a dark night it would be positively macabre.

The White Lady

The ghost of Lady Margaret, known as the White Lady because she is dressed all in white, has been seen to leave the tower and walk along the Rampart Walk. Among the many reports of her appearance is one of a terrifying experience which a man had one night in 1987. For months he had spent nights visiting the castle in the hope of seeing something then one night he entered the castle, walked along the Rampart to Margaret's Tower where he descended the spiral staircase to the dungeon. It was completely dark then a brilliant light appeared, illuminating the chamber and the White Lady appeared in front of him. He was so frightened that he ran up the stairs and out of the castle as fast as he could, and nothing will make him visit the castle again.

In other parts of the castle we saw fireplaces stranded where other floors had once been, and we peered into one fireplace at ground level where we saw the sky a great distance away.

Many jackdaws were flying around the ruined walls and uttering their harsh "chak chak". The walls were draped with the plants of Ivy-leaved toadflax, Herb Robert and small ferns which had found a scanty lodging in crevices in the ancient stone.

Whilst standing in the former kitchen and looking up past the towering walls to the sky we noticed that the clouds were moving very fast overhead. Both Jan and I had a strange feeling that time was passing unnaturally quickly outside but in the castle we were caught in a time warp. It was almost as though we were disconnected with the outside world.

The Blue Lady

A ghost with an evil reputation is that of the Blue Lady whose appearance is a portent of death, not necessarily of the person who sees her. She is supposed to be the daughter of one of the barons of Berry Pomeroy and had given birth to a child sired by her own father and whom she strangled.

Tempting Death

She has been known to beckon a man from the summit of a lofty wall and when he tried to reach her thinking that she would fall, the masonry gave way and he almost fell headlong to a great depth. Luckily, he managed to cling to a ledge and was eventually rescued. When he mentioned the lovely woman he had tried to save he was told that she was not a real person but a phantom.

Pure Evil

The presence of another evil ghost was felt by a group of people who were ghost watching at the castle one night in 1983 and as a result they were all in a state of terror. Later when one of them used an ouija board in his home the ghost came through and answered some questions. She said that her name was Isabella and that she was nine years old. She then appeared with an evil grin on her face and caused much panic, going from one person to another to taunt them and to frighten them.

Making Contact

They contacted her for nine months through the ouija board and found out who she was and how she had lived. She had been born a Pomeroy but was illegitimate and had spent all her time within the castle walls. She had been well cared for and had the best of food and clothes. One evening she entered the kitchen and saw her mother, who was a maid, about to be raped surrounded by drunken men who had gone there to gorge on food and wine after a successful day's hunt. She tried to drag her away but one of the men hit the girl and she fell head first on the stone floor dying instantly. At first she did not know that she was dead. She tried again to save her mother but when she tried to pull her mother's arm her hands kept going through her mother's hands and body. She made many attempts but all in vain. She saw her mother raped repeatedly and slowly she realised that she herself was dead. For over five hundred years she was tortured mentally by the horror of that night and she remained earth-bound and in a negative state. Circumstances had turned an innocent little girl into a ghostly monster. Gradually after the nine months of contact in a family environment she was introduced to a greater more positive spirit from a higher plane and she was reunited with her mother. She is at last free of Berry Pomeroy. Later it was discovered that there were another twenty-six negative spirits in and around the castle.

The sky was blue and the sun was bright making the castle ruins seem peaceful and innocent and I didn't feel at all uneasy. (I even went into the dungeon of Margaret's Tower again on my own). The reports of spine-chilling experiences mean that the castle can invoke other feelings. With this thought we left the castle meaning to return on another day.

Two days later we were at Berry Pomeroy castle again. This time I took our dogs Sally and Dusty close to the haunted Margaret's Tower to see their reaction. It has been found that dogs often refuse to go near but our dogs could not get close enough and tried to get through the narrow openings of the gun loops. Either our dogs do not possess the reputed sixth sense or the ghost was away for the day !

Paul wandered around by the walls with his gadget which records electrical energy to see if he could get a reading. The tall trees nearby shook in sudden gusts of wind and I felt very cold although the sun was shining and I had felt quite comfortable until I had arrived at the castle.

We spoke to a man who was photographing the tower and who was curious to know what Paul was doing. The man was a photography teacher from a nearby college and had brought a group of students to practice their skills. One of the boys later told us that he had seen a shadow move out into the sunlight from the deep shade of the Gatehouse, and one of the girl students said that she had felt a tingling in her hand when she touched a fireplace in the castle kitchen.

Personal Experiences

This time John entered the castle with Paul whilst Jan and I, with the dogs, sat in the forecourt of the nearby tea house. We met the teacher again and spoke to him. He said that he often visits the castle. In spite of it having an evil and frightening reputation he likes it and it doesn't give him any bad feelings, although his dog has refused to go near Margaret's Tower. He told us that he had known one of the builders who had worked on restoration of the castle for about five years. This man had had many ghostly experiences and had witnessed a manifestation of one kind or another nearly every day. Apparently, the present builders continuing with the restoration have seen nothing. Many of the manifestations take place during the day.

Physical Evidence

Some people have had films come out blank or their cameras have jammed. Sometimes ghosts have appeared on film even though none were seen at the time. When I.T.V. cameramen came to take shots of the castle at night for a documentary all their cameras jammed. This happened again the following night after the cameras had been checked and were working properly. On the third night the floodlighting would not function so the filming never took place. Car engines have also failed in the vicinity of the castle.

I asked the woman in charge of the teahouse if she had experienced anything ghostly, to which she replied that once when she was in the shop alone she had felt a hand placed on her shoulder yet there was no one else there. Another time her husband was opening the shop early in the morning when a shadow passed across the door, but again there was no one there.

Jan and I stared at the Gatehouse seeing John and Paul wandering around beyond. The castle is a fascinating ruin and we felt we had to keep gazing at it, our eyes inevitably focussing on the small Margaret's Tower with its dark secrets.

Eventually John and Paul re-joined us, Paul saying that his gadget had recorded slightly less than normal electrical energy in Margaret's Tower where the White Lady is said to roam.

Grisly Suicides

After having had a snack and drinks at the tea house we took the dogs for a walk along a wooded path which joined a narrow road which led round the castle's eastern and northern sides. From here can be seen a dramatic view of the castle ruins on top of a high wooded precipice. It was here that two Medieval horsemen, who were Pomeroy brothers, were supposed to have leapt with their steeds to their death so as not to surrender to their foe who was besieging the castle. The ghostly sounds of galloping hooves and cries have been heard.

The Haunted Mill House

Further on we came to the castle mill house beside a stream and I thought of an account I had read of two women out for a drive who apparently went back in time and they saw the mill house and its surroundings as it once had been, with a girl in peasant dress sitting on a wall.

Retracing our steps we went back to the car and drove away from Berry Pomeroy. Noticing some fields of young green corn I was reminded that crop circles have appeared there in recent years and are more prolific than in other parts of Devon.

The Brutus Stone

Besides ghosts and crop circles there is another inexplicable thing in the area - an ancient stone which is connected with a legend. It is named the Brutus Stone and is set into the pavement near the East gate in the main street of Totnes.

Origins of the Legend

In his History the 12th century historian, Geoffrey of Monmouth, tells of Brutus who was a great-grandson of the Trojan Prince Aeneas. Brutus captured the King of the Greeks and forced him to set the enslaved Trojans free and to provide a fleet of ships for their departure. He embarked on a long voyage, seeking a permanent home for himself and his people. Eventually he arrived at Totnes on the island of Albion (Britain) which was inhabited only by a few non-human giants, such as Gogmagog, etc. After disposing of them Brutus peopled the land with Trojans and re-named it 'Britain' after himself.

Aliens?

What can we make of the non-human giants? This is a mystery that cannot be solved. Were they some kind of alien beings as has been suggested of the goblins and elves of folklore ?

Fabrication or Fact?

Geoffrey of Monmouth was not a reliable historian. He coloured his facts to embellish a story and it is thought that he invented the legend, or most of it, to give a boost to the ancestry of the Britains. What gave him the idea of the giants? The saying 'There is no smoke without fire' makes me wonder.

Berry Pomeroy and the surrounding area is one of great interest and beauty, and to the seeker of unexplained phenomena, one certainly worth visiting.

Ghosts at Berry Pomery

Standing on a steep valley side near the Devon coast, Berry Pomeroy Castle is said to be one of the most haunted in Britain

The sun had not yet dispelled the chill of the early morning, and the birds were still chorusing their welcome to a new day from their roosts in the trees around Berry Pomeroy castle.

There is a clatter of hooves on stone. A horse snorts, followed by a jingling of harness. A man leads his mount onto the castle battlements. He is quickly followed by a second. A bird flutters from St. Margaret's tower, out over the precipitous west wall and up into the pale blue sky. The horses are restless with a certain nervous tension transmitted from their youthful owners, who - turning to face one another - doff their wide-brimmed hats, revealing the same sad faces and features. Brothers, perhaps even twins. Both with the same grim determination straining their boyish good looks.

They wind broad strips of cloth around the horses' eyes, tying them over the animals' necks. Then they embrace each other, cross themselves and commend their souls to God. The birds have finished their morning chorus, and there is a deep and respectful silence. Only the lichen-encrusted walls of the old castle bear witness as the brothers mount their steeds and spur them forwards. They gallop along the battlements at full speed and spring over the western edge, falling through the crisp morning air to their deaths a hundred feet below.

This legendary story is associated with the rambling and ruined castle of Berry Pomeroy, Devon. It stands on a craggy bluff near Totnes and about one mile from the village of the same name.

It is said that because of the Pomeroys' part in the religious rebellion of 1549, Edward VI ordered that the castle's fortifications should be reduced. The family refused to obey, and the castle was besieged by royal troops who had been sent to enforce the order. The last of the Pomeroys were two brothers, twins it is said, who defended the castle for many months. Finding at length that they could hold out no longer, rather than submit to the king's men and have their property taken from them, they chose to ride to their deaths off the castle battlements.

The castle itself has a history going back a thousand years, having been owned by two families, the Pomeroys and Seymours. The Pomeroys lived here for about 500 years after the family's founder, Ralph de la Pomerai from Caen in France, acquired the property following the Norman Conquest. In 1548 it was sold to the Seymour family, in whose hands it remained until the 1970s, when it passed from the eighteenth Duke of Somerset to the Department of the Environment.

Largely destroyed in the Civil War, the castle nowadays presents visitors to Devon with picturesque ruins on an impressive scale. The massive and forbidding gatehouse is the most dominant feature that one sees on arrival. The remains of a Tudor mansion, built by a Seymour in the early 17th-century, stand in the courtyard. Solitary stone stacks in the north wing of the mansion point like accusing fingers up into the sky.

As well as the legend of the Pomeroy brothers, there are other stories which justify the castle's claim to be one of the most haunted in Britain. One is about two medieval Pomeroy sisters, Eleanor and Margaret, who both loved the same man. Eleanor, being insanely jealous of her beautiful sister, imprisoned Margaret and starved her to death. Margaret's ghost is said to walk the ramparts and anyone who sees her will die shortly after. Another ghost who is supposed to presage death is that of a 13th-century woman, another Pomeroy, who had an incestuous relationship with her father. It is said that because she smothered her child, her troubled spirit can find no rest.

In the castle grounds is a wishing tree. It is supposed to have the reputation of granting a visitor's desires provided he walks round it three times backwards.

A green mantle of moss and ivy crowns much of the castle remains nowadays. There are sightless windows and doorways leading nowhere. A variety of birds and other small creatures inhabit the crumbling masonry, which provides them with shelter and support. They peacefully settle back down and no doubt breathe a sigh of relief once the last visitors have departed.

The castle's romantic image is enhanced by the picturesque dereliction and decay of its ruins. And it is not hard to imagine ghostly apparitions here, nor can one ever forget the Pomeroy brothers leaping out from the battlements on their horses.

A Family Re-union.

Thursday being the seventieth anniversary of the birth of Mrs. S. W. Shaw, of this city, her relatives to the number of thirty-eight persons all told took occasion to hold a family reunion at her residence. Thirty-one of them were present, four of them being in Oregon and one being sick, consequently could not attend. Her descendants who where present consisted of four sons with their wives, one daughter and her husband, nineteen grand children and two great grand children. Dr. Clarke and wife were also present on the occasion. A bountiful repast was served and the good old lady was made the happy recipient of a token of esteem from each person present. Mrs. Shaw was born Jan. 24th, 1814, in Canada West, and was married at the age of twenty years, to E.L. Ayers. In Jan. 1838 the family moved to Illinois and in 1843 again moved to Iowa, when that state was a wilderness and the haughty savage roamed its wide prairies at will. Her nearest neighbor were five miles from her home and little was then thought of going that distance to borrow the necessaries of life, when they happened to run short, as was frequently the case.

In 1849 her husband died, and in 1852 she married her present husband, S. W. Shaw, remaining in Iowa until 1864, when the entire family emigrated to the then comparatively unknown state of Oregon. In 1868 they again took up their line of march, this time locating nine miles southeast of Dayton, in what was then Walla Walla county, keeping continually in the advance of civilization. She has five children living, four of whom are now honored residents of this county, and one living in Lane county, Oregon, all alive and prosperous. Three of her children have crossed that portal to which she is now hastening and are waiting to welcome her on the other side. Mrs. Shaw has lived the allotted three score and ten years and has the satisfaction of knowing that her life has been an active one, and that her last days are supported by the loving and willing arms of her highly respected children. We hope, nothwithstanding her great age that she will be spared to celebrate a number such occasions before death claims her for its own.

7 Jan 1888

SHAW—In this city, Jan. 5th, 1888, of paralysis, Mrs. Ruth Shaw, wife of Mr. S. W. Shaw, aged 73 years, 11 months and 12 days.

Mrs. Clark wife of Archibald (dec. Dec 1887) married this S. W. Shaw Aug 1889.

EDWARD W. CLARK

EDWARD WILSON CLARK.

Edward Wilson Clark, one of the leading attorneys of Columbia county, practicing at Dayton, was born in Morrow county, near Heppner, Oregon, on the 15th of November, 1865, his parents being Oscar F. and Mary A. (Allen) Clark, the former a native of the state of New York and the latter of Ohio. They were married, however, in Oregon, Mr. Clark having crossed the plains as a young man of twenty-one or twenty-two years in 1846. The mother's parents died when she was but a little child and she made the long trip to the west with her brother, Charles Allen, who arrived in Oregon about 1850. She continued to reside with her brother in this section of the country until her marriage. Oscar F. Clark took part in the Cayuse Indian war and in 1848 made his way northward and settled on what is now the city of Walla Walla in Walla Walla county, Washington. The previous year the Whitman massacre occurred. He became familiar with every phase of pioneer life and bravely met all of its hardships and privations. He was married about 1850 and for some years lived in Corvallis, Oregon. He had been engaged in teaching in the east and was identified with educational work for several years after his removal to Oregon. In later years he was elected county superintendent of schools of Benton county, Oregon, and he was also appointed the first probate judge of that county. In 1866 he became a member of the board of county commissioners of Umatilla county, Oregon, and he was one of those who were most earnest and effective in securing the establishment of the county seat at Pendleton. Indeed he was recognized as a very prominent and influential citizen of Oregon, where he remained until 1877, when he removed to Columbia county, Washington. Taking up his abode in Dayton, he was soon thereafter elected justice of the peace and served in that office for many years. His decisions were strictly fair and impartial, being based upon the law and the equity in the case, and that he enjoyed the full confidence of the public is indicated by his long retention on the justice bench. Death called him in 1898 and his widow, surviving for about a decade, passed away in 1908.

Edward W. Clark was reared under the parental roof and completed his education in the Dayton high school. In 1886 he took up the study of law, reading under the preceptorship of Judge M. M. Godman, of Dayton, and in 1888 he was admitted to the bar, after which he opened a law office in Dayton, his ability placing him, through the intervening years, in the front ranks of the profession. He served for ten years as prosecuting attorney of Columbia county and for five years was city attorney of Dayton. He was also for one year city clerk and at the present writing is a member of the board of education, in which position he has continuously served since 1893. The public school system indeed finds in him a stalwart champion and one whose efforts in its behalf have been characterized by marked progress.

On the 28th of February, 1892, Mr. Clark was united in marriage to Miss Nellie B. Gritman, of Dayton, a daughter of Delos W. and Mary (Davis) Gritman. Her father, who was one of the successful agriculturists and prominent citizens of Columbia county, served for a number of years as a member of the board of county commissioners and was widely recognized as a man of sterling character and genuine worth. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have a son, Roscoe L., who was graduated from Whitman College with the class of 1915 and is now a student in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia.

Fraternally Mr. Clark is connected with Dayton Camp, No. 95, W. O. W.; with Dayton Circle, No. 238, Women of Woodcraft; and with Dayton Lodge, No. 3, K. P. He ranks with the leading and representative residents of Dayton because of his loyalty in citizenship, because of his genuine personal worth and also by reason of his professional ability. He is a man of well balanced intellect, thoroughly familiar with the law, possessed also of comprehensive general information and of an analytical mind. He is recognized as a formidable adversary in legal combat but one who at all times holds to the highest standards of the profession, his record reflecting credit upon the history of the bench and bar of Washington.

Elmer Clark Retires After 49 Years

Elmer Clark, who has been associated with the drug store business on Main street since 1898, and has long been a favorite salesman with oldtimers and newcomers alike, retired from active business life the first of the month.

Forty-nine years is quite a time to serve the public, but the proprietor of the Elk Drug store, where he has spent most of his business career, R. C. Woolson, says not to take his retirement too seriously as he may be called back now and again, and if the store is in a pinch everyone knows Clark will be there.

Born in Lexington, Oregon, Elmer came here with his parents when but a year old, so he knows no other home than Dayton. He attended the Dayton public schools and was graduated here, taking his first job in a drug store with E. S. Ryerson, from whom he received his first lessons in filling prescriptions. He has mastered pharmacy to the extent that he might have taken examinations and become a registered pharmacist a number of years ago, but he has been content to serve as a general clerk, and a pharmacist's assistant, with the time of his retirement always in the offing and now a reality.

Between 1910 and 1915 he was in business with Henry Parker in the building now occupied by the Dayton Inn, and after that partnership was dissolved, he took a position with W. L. Walls, who owned and operated the Drug Store for many

Between 1910 and 1915 he was in business with Henry Parker in the building now occupied by the Dayton Inn, and after that partnership was dissolved, he took a position with W. L. Walls, who owned and operated the Drug Store for many years, finally selling to R. C. Woolson, the present owner.

So familiar has he become with all lines handled by the Elk Drug store in his many years there, that patrons have taken on the habit of asking Elmer what kind of cough medicine, solve or vitamin tablets they use, trusting his memory rather than their own, and always finding his judgment infallible. Elmer's treatment of customers throughout his nearly 50 years on Main street has been one of the truest examples of "friendly service" ever seen here, and while he will be seen socially and about the streets much as usual, he will be greatly missed at his oldtime post of duty.

Elmer is a great fisherman and takes no little interest in bird-hunting. He has a cozy little cabin on Coates creek where he expects to spend much of his leisure time, and visitors to the Wolfe Fork during the coming season will no doubt find him there more often than at his home in town.

Mrs. Mary Clark

(Weston Leader, Dec 21, 1906)

An Oregon Pioneer of 1846 is Summoned by Death

At six o'clock Sunday morning, December 16, 1906 Mrs. Mary ann Clark aged 74 years, widow of the late O.F. Clark, died at the home of her daughter Mrs. Ezra Vinson of Weston. Mrs. Clark was born in Michgan, August 14, 1833, and crossed the plains from her native state in to King's Valley, Benton County, Oregon, at the age of thirteen. She was the mother of thirteen children, seven of whom survive her. She also had eighteen grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

For many years she lived at Heppner, Oregon, where she was an earnest member of the Baptist Church. In this faith she died.

For some time past she had been in feeble health and often spoke of her willingness to go, saying on the last stormy night, "I shall feel better in the morning."

Her remains were taken by her sons to Dayton, Washington to be laid by the side of her husband who preceded her to the grave twelve years ago.

DAYTON, COLUMBIA COUNTY, WASHINGTON, SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1907.

DEATH IN PATH OF CLOUDBURST

MOTHER AND TWO GIRLS SWEPT AWAY

Carried from their home by a wall of water which came rushing down the canyon and unable to emerge from the muddy torrent to a place of safety, Mrs. W. R. Clark and two daughters, Myrtle aged 4 years and Kittie, aged 8 years, met death in a watery grave Sunday evening, in Field's gulch, about six miles west of Starbuck. The Clark home was almost totally destroyed and the barn was carried from its foundation by the awful force of the turbulent waters which carried everything before them. Mr. Clark was at the time of the accident, in Starbuck, and returned to his home only to find his wife and daughters missing, his home wrecked and his farm practically washed out.

The bodies of the two little girls were found Sunday night by neighbors of the family, about 4 miles from the home and Mrs. Clark's body was recovered by a searching party a short distance below the home, yesterday morning at 5 o'clock.

The cloudburst in which Mrs. Clark and daughters met their death was the first to occur in the Starbuck neighborhood in years, and was wholly unexpected by residents of that section. All streams were swoolen bank full, and all low places were inundated. The Clark home was in a branch of Field's canyon, one of the largest in that section of the country.

All afternoon last Sunday threatening clouds hung heavy over the foothills, but little rain fell during the day. Toward night the heavens took on an inky hue and ever and anon flashes of lightning, followed by reverberating peals of thunder lighted up the weird scene. Following one of these peals of thunder, echoed and re-echoed down the canyon like the boom of heavy artillery, then a sudden momentary silence, followed by an omnious rumble as of a freight train climbing a heavy grade.

Mrs. Clark and children had been standing in the yard watching the forked tongues shoot hither and thither and as a few pattering drops of rain, forerunners of the awful deluge which carried everything in its path, came gently down, one of the hired men left the house and started to the barn to care for the stock. Before reaching his destination, however, he turned to learn the cause of the constantly growing rumble, and saw a sight which rooted him to the spot. Quickly he called to Mrs. Clark and warned her of the approaching danger, but as she did not realize her peril which was threatening, called back that she was not afraid, and started for the house. Before she and her two daughters had covered half the distance the roar of the approaching waters had grown frightful and a few seconds later struck the house, carrying it several hundred feet. Mrs. Clark and daughters were borne away on the first big wave and when their bodies were recovered some distance down the canyon the searchers were overcome by the pitiful scene.

The hired man who had started for the barn escaped, and reports that, had Mrs. Clark and children followed him instead of trying to reach the house, they would have escaped the terrors of the flood. One of the sons of Mr. and Mrs. Clark who was in the house at the time it was struck, escaped alone and unaided, and one hired man and the younger son, William aged 6 years made their escape through a window of the house while it was being carried down the conyon. They succeeded in making their exit just before the house collided with the barn, demolishing both structures. As she started to the house after being warned by the hired man, Mrs. Clark called to the children in the house that she would come and get them, but before she could accomplish this, she had been carried away.

Mr. Clark was in the city yesterday making arrangements for the funeral. He reported the catastrophe in a dazed manner, and seemed hardly able to realize that his wife and two little girls had gone out of his life.

Many narrow escapes by people living below the Clark home are reported. that of Charles Wellman, 4 miles below, being an especially narrow one. Mr. Wellman was warned of the approaching danger by a farm hand who was plowing on a nearby hill, and reached an elevated piece of ground just as the first wall of water rushed by. The heavy rain and cloudburst, being comparatively unknown in the neighborhood of Starbuck, took the residents of that vicinity by complete surprise, and even when warned of the wall of water coming swiftly down the canyon, many thought it was a practical joke, which was responsible for the many narrow escapes.

A total of 6 inches of rain fell in Starbuck, and all records for precipitation in the history were broken. The streets were flooded with about 8 inches immediately following the flood and cellars and basements were filled. The damage to farmers will be enormous, as wheat on nearly all side hills was washed from the ground by the excessive rainfall.

Former Dayton Resident Dies at Culdesac, Idaho

Mrs. Mary Newman, one of Dayton's first residents died at the home of a son at Culdesac, Idaho Friday after a brief illness. Though advanced in years, Mrs. Newman had been in good health, and she had gone to Idaho a short time ago to visit relatives and old friends still living at Culdesac, her former home. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon with the Rev. Mr. Campbell of the M. E. church of Cottonwood in charge, and interment was made in the family plot at the Clarkston cemetery. Many Dayton friends attended the services.

Mary Clark was born in Indiana September 22, 1850. When she was 18 years old she crossed the plains with her parents in a caravan made up of 32 wagons. After a journey of four months the party reached Oregon, and many of the families settled in the vicinity of Salem. There in 1871 Mary Clark was married to William Newman, who came west with his parents in the same wagon train in which the Clarks came to Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Newman continued to live in Oregon until 1874 when they came to Dayton, which was then a very new town. They lived here continuously for 21 years, then spent several years each in different Idaho towns in the Cottonwood district after which they went to Clarkston where Mr. Newman died eight years ago. For the last two years or so Mrs. Newman has made her home here with her daughter, Mrs. A. C. Gerken.

Mrs. Newman was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church throughout most of her life, and was one of its most devoted workers. She was always ready with sympathy and assistance during illness and sorrow, and she is gratefully remembered by many as a friend who never failed them in times of trouble. When Schuyler Rebekah lodge was organized here she was one of its first members.

Mrs. Newman was the mother of seven children, two of whom died in infancy. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. A. C. Gerken of Dayton and Mrs. Jennie Nevin of Pullman, three sons, Homer Newman of Culdesac, Grover Newman of Cottonwood, Idaho, and Milo Newman of Zillan, Wash., 17 grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

MRS. J. D. ISRAEL

Death came to release Mrs. J. D. Israel at 3 a. m. Tuesday from a lingering illness.

Annie P. Clark was born June 18, 1860, the daughter of Ezra M. and Sarah A. Clark of Mt. Pulaski, Illinois, and the granddaughter of a circuit rider of the Methodist Episcopal church in the early 1800's.

Perhaps the most complete biographical background of this lady so dear to her many friends is contained in an interview she gave A. W. Nelson of the Union-Bulletin several years ago. In part it said:

Since 1890 the John D. Israel family has had a prominent place in commercial and civic affairs of Northeastern Oregon and Southeastern Washington. Over a period of four years during the so-called gay 90's, the head of the family took an extremely active part in public affairs around Weston. Thereafter the family moved to Dayton where the customary Israel activities were continued until he died some 30 years ago. Since then the sons and daughters have been carrying on in typical Israel fashion in widely-spread areas, but Mrs. Israel has continued to make Dayton her home.

Last week the roving reporter had the pleasure of interviewing Mrs. Israel, now a lovable matriarch happily blessed with good health, who lives in comfortable circumstances, and has lost none of the width and warmth of her genial smile which Weston friends knew and admired.

While her husband was busily engaged in many civic adventures, Mrs. Israel concerned herself with the raising of a family of 10 children, and devoting unselfish service to the W.C.T.U. and the Methodist church. She joined that church group at the age of 11, which gives her virtually 70 years of continuous membership and activity with the church of her selection. Furthermore, her interests in the affairs of the W.C.T.U. has now continued 49 years.

She has a distinction which few can claim in relation to wide contacts with her family. She has known and seen seven generations. She knew her maternal grandmother and great-grandmother; she has great-grandchildren of her own, adding up to 7 generations all told.

"It is not because I am so awfully old that I can claim that distinction," she told the reporter, "but because my maternal grandparents attained advanced ages."

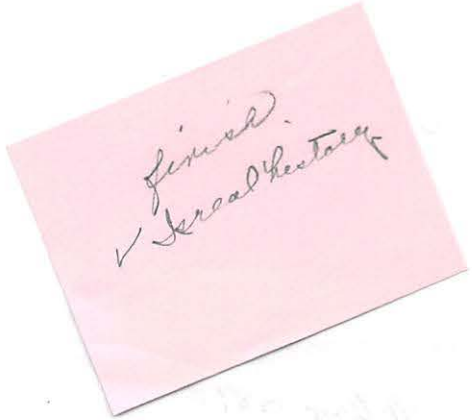
John D. Israel was born in Logansport, Ind., February 3, 1845. His father was a native of North Carolina who had come to Indiana when young. Later he moved to Illinois, and when the war broke out, both father and son soon found themselves in service. John's enlistment was 18 months long, but he saw an extraordinary amount of active service in that short time.

After the war he went to Texas, but returned to Illinois to operate his father's farm for a period of 10 years. Then he engaged in the mercantile business in Chestnut, Illinois, until 1884, when he went into business with D. W. Dunhill & Co., Chicago grain buyers. He was closely associated with the grain business, and one of his sons and his son's sons have steadfastly stuck to that business.

In 1876 he married Anna P. Clark at Chestnut.

By 1890 the family was ready to move west. They came direct to Weston where the family fell in step with the activities of a growing and prosperous city. Israel became a wheat buyer for Hamilton & Rourke, and also became a director in the Weston bank, a councilman, and active in promotion of new school activities at Weston.

Moved to Dayton

In 1894 the family moved to Dayton where Israel again bought grain for Hamilton & Rourke, ventured into the business on his own, and remained with the wheat business in some connection until his death in 1909.


Mrs. Israel in spite of her advanced years kept active not only in her civic affairs but maintained
